Publishing in Transition

- More publications
- Fewer readers per publication (avg.)
- New players (e.g. CNN, USA Today)
- New technologies: CD-ROM, On-line
- Consumers taking control by selection

Publishing of Old: Push

- One to many
- Same for all
- Editors set schedules

Publishing Today: Consumer Pull

- Integrated access to multiple sources
- Personal preferences drives the flow
- Easy Delivery

Consumer's Demand...

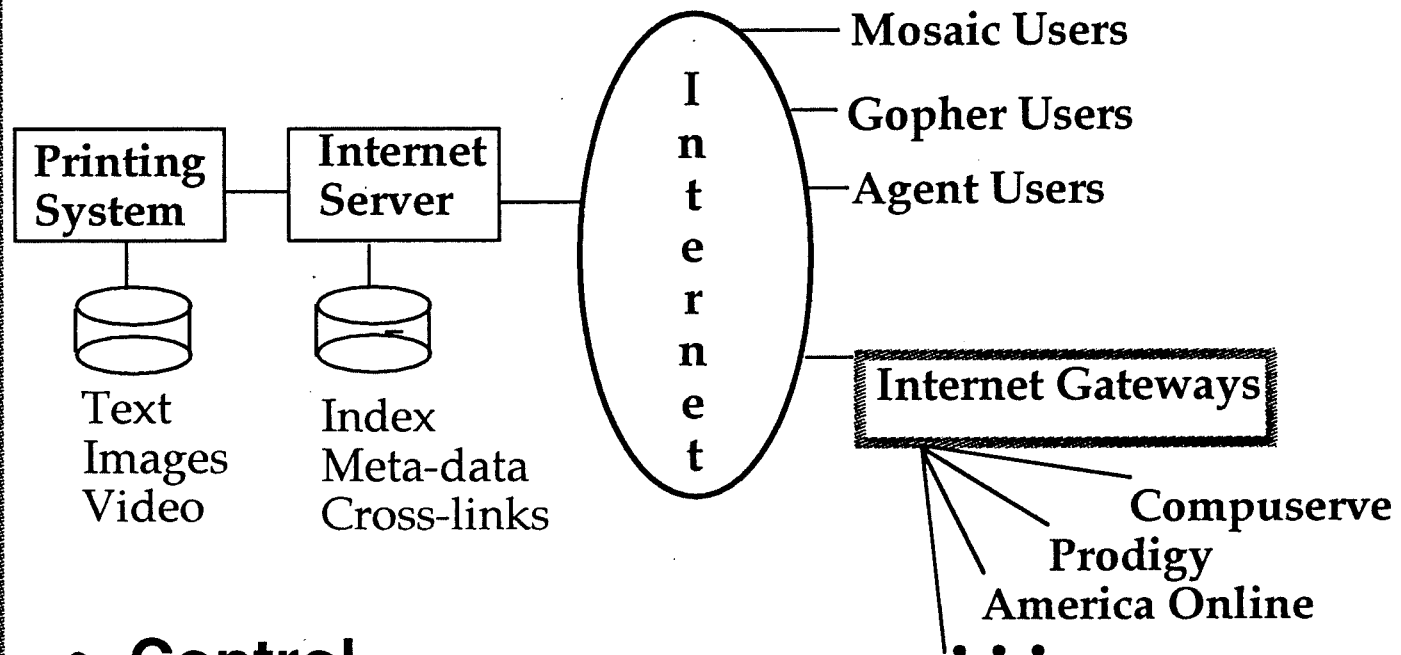

Ease of FIND

- Easy: Integrated delivery to their environment
- Fast: Integrated access to all relevant sources
- Relevant: high quality and on target

Why the Internet?

- Growth
- Architecture
- Momentum
- Users have Flipping the Equation:
 - Don't Push
 - This is about "Demand Pull"

Internet Publishing for the Publisher

- Control
- Distribution
- Advertising and Profits

Internet Consuming: Towards Ease of “Find”

- Integrated Access to Personal/Corporate/Published Information
- Personal Agents work on your behalf across sources
- Timely: When you want it official [\[Index\]](#) name LELAND STANFORD JUNIOR UNIVERSITY, private coeducational institution of higher learning at Palo Alto, Calif., U.S. The university was founded in 1885 and opened in 1891 by railroad magnate Leland [\[Index\]](#) Stanford and his wife, Jane (née Lathrop), and was dedicated to their deceased only child, Leland, Jr. The doors were opened in 1891 to 559 students. The university campus consists largely of Stanford's former Palo Alto farm. The founders also established an endowment of $21,000,000. The buildings, conceived by Frederick Law [\[Index\]](#) Olmsted, the creator of Central Park in New York City, are of soft buff sandstone in a style similar to the old California mission architecture, being long and low with wide colonnades, open arches, and red-tiled roofs.

Stanford maintains branch campuses in France, Italy, Germany, Austria, and England. About half of its undergraduates study overseas at them for six-month periods. Advanced study centres are maintained in Japan, Taiwan, and several other countries. The departments of the university are organized into schools of law, medicine, education, engineering, business, earth sciences, and humanities and sciences.

In 1921 the Food Research Institute of Stanford University was organized. The [\[Index\]](#) Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace, founded by Stanford alumnus Herbert Hoover during World War I, contains more than 1,000,000 printed and manuscript items dealing with 20th-century international relations. The [\[Index\]](#) Stanford Linear Accelerator Center was established in 1961 when Congress appropriated $114,000,000 for construction on the campus of an accelerator 2 miles long under contract with the Atomic Energy Commission. The Stanford Medical Center, completed on the campus in 1959, now has more than 550 beds. The Hopkins Marine Station is maintained by the University at Pacific Grove on the Bay of Monterey.
